'A UNIVERSITY COLLECTS II'

The University has at its disposal a remarkable number of collections of one form or another. Just how many, in what form, and of what kind was anyone's guess until the University Collections Committee began exploring the various holdings and establishing a viable administrative structure for the collections. These range from the working-research collections to those which have been purchased or donated, as in the case of artifacts. They are often invaluable in terms of their rarity and the volumes of research they represent. In their present forms, however, many are uncatalogued and otherwise inaccessible due to the absence of appropriate methods of display.

In 1970 an exhibition entitled "A University Collects" sought to alert the community to these and other problems surrounding the collections on campus. A second exhibition is presently underway to be called "A University Collects II" staged by the Collections Committee. It is intended as the preliminary in a series seeking to familiarize the individual with the kinds and extent of the various holdings.

The current exhibition deals with some of the working-research collections on campus. Given the theme Alberta, the exhibition focuses on the natural sciences that deal with those areas of the collections encompassing the province. The specimens are representative of the research collections of the Departments of Botany, Entomology, Geology, Pedology, and Zoology. The location of each of these collections is given in their respective cases, accompanied by the classification of the collection and its curator. To provide a structure that allows the viewer to obtain a better conception of Alberta's natural environment, the province has been broken into five major areas loosely defined as the Boreal Forest, Aspen Parkland, Mountain, Prairie, and Cypress Hills regions. Specimens have been chosen that are indigenous to these areas and accompanying maps in each case delineate these regions.

A meaningful organization of the visual presentation combined with an attractive format are crucial to the success of any exhibition. Recognizing this, the Collections Committee commissioned two graduates of Art and Design to design and assemble the presentation. Susan Nash and Gunther Ruppel were chosen for their interest in visual communication. It was their task to present an academic subject in a way that was both instructive and aesthetically appealing. Working with modular concrete furniture and plexiglass display cases, the exhibits have a three dimensional quality which in many ways is superior to the displays found in museums.

Opening soon, the exhibition will be located in the Rutherford Library Galleria. A stroll by might prove to be an informative experience in more ways than one.

THAILAND PROJECT II

On September 1, six women and ten men from Thailand will begin studying in Edmonton high schools and at the University. They are not, however, students in the usual sense—they are secondary school principals and assistant principals. This is the first group of four coming to Edmonton to observe and study educational administrative procedures as part of Thailand Project II. The project, the only one of its kind in education in Canada, is being undertaken by the Department of Educational Administration, with the government of Thailand providing the financing from a special loan from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank).

Project II is designed to give the principals and assistant principals training in the administration of secondary schools. A similar project was held from 1966 to 1972, but that one was handled by the Faculty of Education and had a more diversified scope. It included fields of study such as guidance and industrial arts teaching.

The Thai students, whose average age is about forty years, will study for five months. The program is known as "short-term intensive training." One day a week will be spent on campus receiving theoretical background in educational administration, and four days a week will be spent in city high schools. In the high schools, the Thai administrators will be assigned to a senior high school administrator, and will observe, discuss and report on the various procedures of secondary school management and administration. The theoretical training will enable the students to generalize their field experience, and enable them to apply that knowledge with more flexibility when they return to Thailand. Procedures which work in Canada may not work exactly the same way in Thailand, so a more general approach is needed rather than simple imitation of Canadian practices.

There is an urgent need for accommodation for these students. L.R. Gue, Director of Thailand Project II, says that so far, eleven places have been found for the students. If anyone wishes to help out in this regard by taking one of the students into his home on a room and board basis, he can call Mr. Gue at 432-4906 or 433-8642 (home), or W.C. McCarthy, Co-ordinator of Thailand Project II, at 432-3689 or 434-5640 (home).

FOREIGN STUDENT ORIENTATION

This year, as in the past, the Foreign Student Office, Department of Student Affairs, will run an orientation program for newly arrived students from overseas. The program is looked upon as being basically a preventive service: preventing problems for the group or individuals by presenting them with information relevant to Canadian life. Sessions on banking, housing, Medicare, University services, shopping and so on are presented by volunteer experts from various city business and social service institutions. As well, this year Edmonton mayor William Hawrelak has agreed to offer a welcome to the students.

The entire orientation program, which will run from August 26 to August 30, is funded by the Graduate Students' Association, Student Affairs, the Students' Union, and the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA). It is organized and implemented by many volunteers, both Canadian and foreign.

All foreign students are strongly urged to attend, and all departments are asked for their co-operation in informing their new overseas students of the program's existence. If there are any inquiries regarding the program please call Rorri McBlane, Foreign Student Orientation Co-ordinator, 2-5 University Hall, at 432-4145.

MULTICULTURALISM CONFERENCE

From September 3 to 6, academics, government officials, labor union leaders, business executives, and community leaders will participate in a conference on multiculturalism and third world immigration to Canada. The aim of the conference, according to one of its organizers, G.S. Paul, Professor of Sociology, is to "try to present hard facts so that policy directions could be derived from them later."

The format of the conference will be the presentation of papers and panel discussions, with formal and informal discussions. Representatives from the federal level of government will include Senator Paul Yuzyk; Stewart Goodings, Director General, Citizenship Policy, Federal Secretary of State Department; George Saunders, Director General, Department of Manpower and Immigration; and Carol Fogel, Director of the Saskatchewan Human Rights Commission. The provincial level will be represented by Neil Crawford, Minister of Labor; Julian Kozlak, Minister of Education; Brian Williams, Vice-Chairman of the Board of Industrial Relations; Randy Nicholson, Director of Organizational Development for the Alberta government; and Pierre Monod, Chairman of the Alberta Cultural Heritage Council. Academics from many departments in the University will also attend: for example, Terry White, Chairman of the Department of Sociology, and E.J. Chambers, Dean of the Faculty of Business Administration and Commerce.

The conference is open to the public. There is a registration fee of $25. Advance registration is advised, and forms and information can be obtained from the Department of Sociology.
